Key Findings & Highlights

NelsonHall's market analysis of the Recruitment Process Outsourcing industry and trends consists of 107 pages.

The Recruitment Process Outsourcing (RPO) market remains buoyant in 2019, with vendors expecting double-digit growth. PESTLE factors, the maturity of RPO markets, and the blurring of talent models make a complicated talent landscape.

In a bid to better compete for talent in a tight market, vendors have built their expertise to such a level that offering a broad range of services, often packaged under a "consultancy" umbrella (and sometimes sold as separate revenue-generating services) is the new norm. With new vendors emerging in the RPO market, filling gaps in provision, there is/will continue to be more differentiation, as vendors choose to focus on geographies, industries, skillsets, size of client organization, high-volume or niche hiring, fully-automated tech or tech with touch, RPO or broader talent acquisition (TA) model types, and so on.

With data/analytics and technology/tools being the enablers of RPO/TA services, vendors continue to invest significantly in growing their tech capability (in team size and knowledge). Multifunctional or unified platforms continue to evolve, with better integration, more automation and more use of AI.

To save internal operational costs/client organizational spend on RPO services, vendors continue to evolve their service delivery. 2018 has seen a limited expansion of delivery infrastructure, more consolidation of shared service centers, a change of strategy around onshoring/nearshoring, and offshoring, an increase in blended delivery, and more tailored delivery to meet client needs.
